Journal of Heart

Computational Modeling of Performance Analysis of Axial Flow Blood pumps: Newtonian vs. Non-Newtonian Blood Flow Behavior

Ankit Prakash¹, Kuldeep Singh², Anubhav Rawat^{1*}, Abhishek Kumar Tiwari¹, Dharmendra Tripathi^{3*}, and RP Tewari¹

¹Department of Applied Mechanics, Motilal Nehru National Institute of Technology Allahabad, Prayagraj, U.P. ²Gas Turbine and Transmissions Research Centre, University of Nottingham, Nottingham, NG7 2TU, U.K ³Department of Mathematics, National Institute of Technology - Uttarakhand, Uttarakhand

Correspondence should be addressed to Anubhav Rawat, Assistant Professor, Applied Mechanics Department, MNNIT Allahabad, Prayagraj-211004, UP, India; Dharmendra Tripathi Associate Professor, Mathematics Department, National Institute of Technology - Uttarakhand, Uttarakhand, India

Received Date: November 2, 2022; Accepted Date: November 18, 2022; Published Date: retracted

ABSTRACT

Blood pumps are lifesaving medical devices for persons suffering from coronary heart disease (CHD). Selection of a suitable blood pump with efficient performance is a challenge during heart implants.

Citation: Ankit Prakash, Computational Modeling of Performance Analysis of Axial Flow Blood pumps: Newtonian vs. Non-Newtonian Blood Flow Behavior. J Heart 3(1): 19-32.